The Windham Transcript says:
It is with unusual pleasure that the Transcript lays before its readers this week a portrait of the Hon. Costello Lippitt of Norwich. The Transcript and its constituency are especially interested in Mr. Lippitt because he is a native of Killingly.

At the present time he is very much talked of in connection with the next republican nomination for treasurer of the state of Connecticut. He is a banker and treasurer of one of the largest savings banks in the state. As a business man with a lifetime of experience, as a financial man of affairs, and as chief executive of a large municipality, he is especially well fitted to fill this important office.

So far as known there is no candidate against him for this nomination, and it is expected that he will receive the unanimous call of the next state convention.
